BACKGROUND SUMMARY

Daniel Everett Hale was employed by several regional radio stations between 1972 and 1978, primarily in technical and operational roles. During this period, Hale gained access to transmission equipment and relay systems later identified as being intermittently utilized by TDI for signal testing and data routing.

No formal employment record exists linking Hale directly to TDI. However, internal audits indicate repeated exposure to restricted transmission pathways beyond civilian authorization.

Following termination from his last position, Hale demonstrated an increasing fixation on classified broadcast activity.

PSYCHOLOGICAL PROFILE

Based on interviews with colleagues and family members, Hale exhibited:

- Progressive paranoia
- Obsessive documentation of broadcast frequencies
- Heightened distrust toward corporate and governmental entities

Despite these behaviors, Hale maintained technical competence and coherent communication patterns. Several recovered audio recordings indicate knowledge inconsistent with publicly available information.

No psychiatric diagnosis was formally recorded.

INCIDENT INVOLVEMENT

On July 31, 1979, Hale initiated an unauthorized live radio transmission during scheduled programming hours. The broadcast included direct accusations against TDI, alleging information suppression, signal manipulation, and unauthorized experimentation.

Multiple statements referenced internal terminology used exclusively within TDI operational documentation.

The transmission was terminated remotely after approximately eleven minutes.

The circumstances surrounding the subject's death have been deemed consistent with the official cause. No further investigation has been authorized.
